

2016 Academic Board By-Election
Teaching Staff
John H. Daniels Faculty of Architecture, Landscape, and Design
Candidates' Statements

Jeannie Kim

I have had the privilege of working with staff, faculty, and students at the Daniels Faculty in my capacity as Assistant Dean for the past three years. In my new role as the Director of the Undergraduate Program in Architectural Studies, I look forward to continuing to work on the evolution of this dynamic Faculty and learning from colleagues on the Academic Board about similar changes happening elsewhere in the University. I have appreciated the opportunity to serve on the Board in my capacity as a member of the administrative staff and hope to continue doing so now.

Jane Wolff

Jane Wolff is an associate professor at the Daniels Faculty of Architecture, Landscape, and Design. She holds a bachelor's degree in visual and environmental studies from Harvard and Radcliffe Colleges and a master's degree in landscape architecture from the Harvard Graduate School of Design. Her research work investigates and documents the hybrid landscapes that emerge from interactions between natural processes and cultural interventions. It aims to develop language for these difficult—and often contested—places that can be shared among the wide range of audiences with a stake in the future.