Dear Cheryl:

Since its inception in 1964, the University of Toronto Scarborough has undergone a steady evolution in the size of its community, physical campus and the nature of its programs. Throughout this period, its name has also evolved. The campus began as Scarborough College and in 1998 was renamed "University of Toronto at Scarborough".

I would like to propose that the word "at" be dropped from our name so that the official name becomes "University of Toronto Scarborough". The latter name reflects current signage and common usage for a number of years by staff, students and faculty, and is viewed as best representing the campus. This proposed name change is also consistent with the name change (implemented for similar reasons), by the University of Toronto Mississauga in 2010.

Based on a thorough review of the UTSC identity in 2010, various broad-based consultations have taken place with different stakeholder groups. With respect to the present proposed motion, feedback from these consultations indicates that the word "at" in our name connotes location, and that by dropping the word "at", the name better captures the unique character and environment of the campus, while also being a simpler phrase to use.

For these reasons, I submit that the "University of Toronto at Scarborough" name be formally changed to the "University of Toronto Scarborough."

This motion was approved unanimously by the Council of the University of Toronto Scarborough on Tuesday, March 29th, 2011.

Sincerely,

Franco J. Vaccarino, PhD
