Questions Guiding the Consultation

1. How do we shape the future of social work as a discipline?
2. What does the future of applying a critical EDI lens to research, teaching and delivery of social, human and health services look like?
3. What experience of “learning and becoming” do we want to create in classroom, fieldwork, and other learning spaces?
4. Where is FIFSW being called to lead the research and practice of social work?

Vision & Mission

Vision

Grounded in social justice, human rights, and a dedication to promoting health and well-being in communities, the Factor-Inwentash Faculty of Social Work aims to set new global standards in innovative social work, teaching, leadership and practice – enabling us to be at the forefront in addressing some of today's most pressing social challenges

Mission

The Factor-Inwentash Faculty of Social Work promotes the health and wellbeing of individuals, families, and communities in local and global contexts by conducting rigorous research and scholarship, educating ethical and skilled social work leaders and changemakers, and working alongside communities and across disciplines to co-create and advocate for evidence-based practice and policies that advance truth and reconciliation, social and environmental justice, human rights, and equity.

Amplify the local, national and global impact of our research and knowledge development.

Codesign innovative and excellent learning experiences.

Mobilize relationships with practice communities.

Foster collective thriving across the Faculty and the field.

Advance diverse approaches to promoting social justice, environmental justice, and human rights.

Alignment of Faculty and University Priorities
