Indexed Content and Research Citations: Major Component for University Rankings

Our reputation for quality and impact continues to be recognized via the indexing of our publications in major scholarly databases, which determine citation metrics and contribute to university rankings. UTP journals have long been indexed in Medline, PubMed, Web of Science, and Scopus, among others. This year, we are very pleased that our books are now indexed in the Web of Science, further enhancing visibility and reach within one of the most used scholarly databases globally.

Publishing: Global Outreach and Partnerships

UTP continues to extend its global footprint through strategic alliances with leading international publishers, fostering cross-cultural scholarly exchange. Partnerships with Qatar University Press, Peking University Press, Shanghai Jiao Tong University Press, and Tsinghua University Press, have resulted in joint publishing programs and translation agreements allowing UTP titles to reach new audiences in Asia and the Middle East. Collaborative editorial projects promote scholarship internationally, while broadening readership of UTP and our partner presses works, and bringing global perspectives to critical issues.

In the early part of 2026, we will continue to build on this work with visits to our partners in China, Japan, Korea, and Thailand, as well as our partners in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, and Mexico.

This past year marked the development of several new collaborations with leading scientific organizations. In 2025, we launched the Journal of Clinical Insights in Neonatology in partnership with the Toronto Centre for Neonatal Health, a centre for research and innovation formed by four Toronto hospitals: Toronto Hospital for Sick Children, Mount Sinai, St. Michael's, and Sunnybrook. Our new partnership with the Canadian Society for Civil Engineering will enable the development of specialized publications to advance civil engineering research and practice in Canada and beyond. Finally, our collaboration with the Canadian Pharmacists Association is focused on authoritative resources for pharmacy education and practice, including updated drug compendia and clinical guidelines. These collaborations strengthen our role in professional and scholarly publishing and ensure the broader dissemination of critical scientific research.
