TORONTO

Introduction

This report describes undergraduate and graduate degrees awarded in the 2025 calendar year.

The University of Toronto is the largest university in Canada and one of the largest publicly funded universities in North America – with 18 academic divisions, over 700 undergraduate programs, and more than 200 graduate programs across three campuses. In 2025-26, the University enrolled just over 103,000 students – equivalent to 91,245 full-time equivalent enrolments (FTEs) of course load activity.

The University of Toronto awarded more than 23,500 undergraduate and graduate degrees in the 2025 calendar year, including 855 doctors, nurses, pharmacists, and dentists. Many of these graduates have been working in community health care systems for several years through clinical rotations in their programs and 54% of new specialist physicians in Ontario graduated from the Temerty Faculty of Medicine. Last year, the University also graduated 984 healthcare workers with professional master's degrees in public health, nursing and medicine, in addition to 734 teachers and social workers, and over 1,100 doctorates.

Across the University, 80% of undergraduate students graduate within six years of starting their program, with higher rates among professional programs in the health sciences. This rate has grown steadily from 69% in 2011 and is now the same as the average for highly selective public schools in the United States and comparable with Canadian peers. The actual graduation rate of students is even higher as these figures exclude students who move on to second-entry professional programs prior to graduating from their original first-entry program. Increasingly these students are graduating with employment experience through curricular or co-curricular opportunities; and with more than 22,500 undergraduate course enrolments taught each year by preeminent faculty members like University Professors, endowed Chair holders, or those holding Canada Research Chairs, many graduates have been taught by leading global experts. As such, according to the prestigious Times Higher Education magazine, U of T graduates are among the world's most desirable employees – ranked 2nd among publicly funded universities in North America and 13th place globally.

Upon graduation, U of T graduates become part of a large and diverse global network of over 700,000 alumni, who contribute to civil society in more than 200 countries and territories, creating 3.7 million jobs and generating $368 billion in annual revenues. University of Toronto alumni active in the labour force enjoy a 97% employment rate, with a higher percentage of alumni participating in the knowledge-intensive economy compared to the national average, particularly in the educational, legal, health and government sectors. Among graduates from undergraduate programs, 90% report being employed full-time in jobs related to their program two years after graduation, and these recent graduates averaged a salary of around $56,000 according to Statistics Canada.
